

Participation in “Exhibition cum Sale: Earning while Learning” at Pragjyotish College on 18th November 2024

Students of the Department of Botany, North Gauhati College enthusiastically participated in the Exhibition organized at Pragjyotish College, Guwahati. The event served as a platform for promoting local food culture, sustainable products, and student entrepreneurship.

As part of the event, the students from North Gauhati College set up a vibrant stall where they showcased and sold a variety of eco-friendly and locally-made items, including:

1. Cultivated mushrooms grown as part of the department’s skill development programme.
2. Vermicompost produced through organic waste recycling initiatives.
3. Homemade herbal soaps, promoting sustainable and chemical-free alternatives.
4. Culinary items, prepared by students using indigenous recipes.
5. Plant saplings of local and ornamental species, encouraging green practices.

The stall attracted a large number of visitors and received appreciation for the quality and uniqueness of the products. The participation also reflected the students’ commitment to sustainability, innovation, and community engagement.

Faculty members from both institutions visited the stall and encouraged the students for their efforts. The event fostered a spirit of collaboration between North Gauhati College and Pragjyotish College and provided valuable exposure to the participating students.

The food fair was a grand success, not only as a cultural celebration but also as an opportunity for practical learning and skill development. The Department of Botany, North Gauhati College, extends its sincere thanks to Pragjyotish College for the opportunity to be part of this meaningful event.

